 Somniant quidam totum Heraldicæ corpus sub unicâ ipsius parte (Armorum scilicet Explicatione quam Blazoniam vocant) contineri, quam adeo facilem iudicant, ut vir mediocris ingenii unius mensis spatiolo totam devorare queat, dummodo vel mediocre tempus colloct in studiis. Sed eos multum hallucinari arbitrantur, quibus est plena nobilis illius Artis cognitio incocta. Hoc sentiunt omnes, eum qui Armorum Blazoniam callet, unum tantum pedem posuisse in stapede ad propositum percutiendum iter per Heraldiam: nam ut verbis utar viri * non inruditi nostris, Armorum modo Blazoniam tenere, non magis Heraldicum, quam legere Titulos qui Pharmacopolarum Testis inscribuntur, Medicum constituit.

Et hoc nullatenus omittas. T. R. apud Civitatem Novæ Sarum secundo die Junii.*

Per ipsum Regem.

Consilia Brevia diriguntur Vicecomitibus subscript, sub eadem dat. viz. Vic. Wilter, Vic. Suffex, Vic. Dors.

Page 147. The Ancients did bear Arms for the honours sake of Vertue: for it is one, nay the chiefest honour for a Gentleman to bear a Coat of Arms, and without which none can be called Gentle; and that is commanded by the Sanctions of the Laws of Nations.

Page 161. It was accounted as sacriledge, and of great impiety, to violate the holy Rites, or Investitures of the Fæcials: and if any had been so barbarous, they esteemed that shortly after some great danger would happen to their State or City; which they alwaies feared ever after the daies of Fabius: for that the same year that he prophaned the holy things of their Fæcials, it happened that the Roman City was sacked and harried by the Gauls, &c. I wish that as with the Romans, our Heralds were reckoned honorable, sacred and reverend, (the which appeareth by their Robes, and the Orders of their Ceremonies) that so we may esteem of them, and not make a Gibe at their Investitures and Surcoats of Arms, being the signs of Supreme Majesty, whose excellency they serve, &c.

Edmond Bolton's Elements of Armories,
Printed at London, 1610. 4^o.

Chap. 2. Arms are such Hereditable and Armorial Marks, by which Gentlemen are known first from the ignoble, and then one from the other.

Chap. 15. Antiquity would have Heraldry (or Armory) stiled Attreffs and Queen of Liberal Knowledge; for that in it all the fair Arts seem to assemble, and every Grace, or (as the Latins speak) every Venus of Invention (not blurred with obscuring Commentaries) glitters there in open manner, with much significancy, ornament, and utility, &c. I have ever held armories very worthy the study and leisure of a free-born man; and the rather, for that Arms are in a sort the only remaining customary evidences or testimonies of Noble-Nobleness, now that neither Statues, Arcks, Obelisks, Trophæas, Spires, nor the publike magnificent erectious are in use, &c.

William Wyrley, in the true use of Armory,
Printed at London, 1592. 4^o.

Page 1, & 2. I have been very careful to set down Standards, Pennons, Cout-armors, and other marks of Honor, to the end it may publicly be known of what necessity the use of them is, &c. And these matters being well conceived (as indeed without such Tokens no Martial Discipline can be exercised, no Army ranged, no Attempt of any Company achieved; and so (by consequence) no Conquest made, nor so much as any Commonwealth (whatsoever) defended, neither from outward Enemies, Civil Discord, nor the Rebellion of any Plebeian Rout, bethe same never so simple, rude, or of small esteem) it will (I hope) reduce into estimation a matter both of Honor, Order, and Necessity, which now (through the abuse thereof) is so far run into contempt, as that (of many men) it is holden for a thing of no price, but thought to be a very mockery, and a matter of no other sequence than to set up vain and fantastical glorious fellows into a pride, and to draw from them some small sums to certain persons into an Office instituted, which no doubt was by the wisest and best governed States at the first devised, and generally by all of any Policy received to a most necessary end; yet think they (as it is now in use) it serveth but only for that purpose.

Page 24. The Registering of Descents carries with it Reason joyned to Authority and Custom; for as by God's Law there is commanded a Priviledg of Inheritance to the first begotten of Israel, and so for want of Sons to the Females, and from them to others answerable to the proximity of their Bloud and Kinred, which without Laws of this Land, and of most Nations do concur and agree, it doth well stand with peaceable Government for the avoiding of contentions which which may arise for want of Records, to testify the truth of mens Titles to their Inheritances, that Genealogies and Pedigrees should be enrolled and kept in remembrance.

Gerard Leigh in the Accedence of Armory,

Printed at London, 1597. 4^o.

Page 40. The Law of Arms is most part directed by the Civil Law.

John Guill. Displ. of Heraldry, Sec. 1. Chap. 1.

Arms are nothing else but Demonstrations and Testimonies of Nobility, and of worthy prowess—full Exploits performed in Martial Services, especially if they be Ancient, and bestowed by a Noble and Renowned Prince: And this Definition is according to their use in the time of Alexander the Great, and since until of latter times. But Arms (according to their modern (that is, since the time of Charles the Fourth) and present use,) are Hieroglyphical, or Enigmatical Symbols, acquired by the virtue and good service performed by their Bearer, or some of his Ancestors; either Martial Exploits abroad, or by their Learning and Wisdom which they attained to, by spending their Bodies and Spirits in continual study, to make themselves fit for the Patronage and Defence of the Weal-publike at home.

How great the Dignity and Estimation of Arms ever hath been, and yet is, we may easily conceive by this, that they do delight the beholders, and greatly grace and beautifie the places wherein they are erected; so also they do occasion their spectators to make serious inquisition, whole they are? who is the owner of the house wherein they are set up? of what Family their Bearer is descended? and who were his next, and who his remote Parents or Ancestors? It is very probable that these Signs, which we call Arms at this day, however in former Ages they have been named, (whether Emblems or Pictures, graven, painted or embossed, or Notes representing some secret or hidden Mystery; as Hieroglyphicks, or Enigmatical or hidden conceits) were external Notes of the inward disposition of the mind, manifesting in some sort the natural qualities of their bearers, yet so as they were hidden from the vulgar sort, and known to the judicious, only experimented in the knowledge of the natural virtues and dispositions of Bodies Celestial, of Animals, and of Vegetables, &c. The principal end for which Arms were first taken up, and put in use, was, that they might serve for Notes and Marks to distinguish Tribes, Families, and Particular Persons, each from other: As also the more commonly to distribute Nations, Tribes, and Families into Regiments and Bands; as also for assembling, conducting, and governing them in Martial Expeditions, and distinguishing of particular Persons in Wars, as well amongst themselves as from their Enemies; because it often falleth out by reason of the likenesses of Armour and Weapons of discipline of War, and of Language and Voice (in default of such signs) that much Treachery is wrought, and many men after Battle or Skermish do make their retreat to the Troops of the Enemy, to the danger of their surprize, or loss of life.

Escu-

William Camden Esq; Clarencieux, King of Arms, &c.
in his Remains, &c.

Arms are Ensigns of Honour born in Banners, Shields, and Coats, for notice and distinction of Families one from another, and descendable, as hereditary to Posterity.

Edward Waterhouse Esq; A Discourse and Defence of Arms and Armory, &c. Printed at London, 1660. 8o.

Pag. 3, & 4. While men of Name and Fortune have patronized things that have no direct aspect on Peace, Order, and National Civility, there has scarce been any have owned this Lady [Heraldry,] which is the Image of Order, and (as it it were) the Magna Charta of Oeconomique Regulation, and thence of Politick distinction.

Page 54. It appears that Eschabeons of Arms were introduced as a help to the right use of Arms; for if the end of War be to oppose Enemies, and defend Nations and Neighbours in Amity, who without differences of knowing, may fall foul each with other, and not do the Duty of Right to those they owe it to; then what is a Remedy to prevent and hinder the contrary, is of much use, and this doth Arms in Standards, Ensigns and Shields.

Henry Peacham's Compleat Gentleman, Printed at London, 1661.

Chap. 16. It is meet that a Noble, or Gentleman who beareth Arms, and is well descended, be not only able to blazon his own proper Coat, derive by Pedegrée the descent of his Family from the Original, know such Matches and Allies as are joyned to him in Blood; but also of his Prince, the Nobility and Gentry where he liveth; which is not of meer Ornament as the most suppose, but diversly necessary, and of great consequence: As had I lived in those times when that fatal difference of either Rose was to be decided by the Sword, with which Party in equity and conscience could I have sided, had I been ignorant of the Descent and Pedegree Roy-al, and where the right had been by Inheritance of Blood, Match, or Alliance? How should we give Nobility, her true Value, Respect and Title, without notice of her Merit? and how may we guess her Merit without these outward Ensignes and Badges of Vertue, which anciently have been accounted sacred and precious; withal, discern and know an intruding Upstart, shot up with the last nights-Mushroom, from an ancient descended and deserved Gentleman, &c. or myself, a Gentleman, know my own Rank? Besides, it is a contemplation full of pleasing variety, and for the most part sympathizing with every noble and generous Disposition; in substance the most refined part of Natural Philosophy, while it taketh the Principles from Geometry, making use almost of every several Square and Angle. For these and other reasons, I desire (saith he) that you would bestow some hours in the study of the same; for a Gentleman honorably descended to be utterly ignorant herein, argueth in him a disregard of his own worth; a weakness of conceit, or indisposition to Arms and Honorable Action, and sometimes meer Ideotism, &c.

Idem Lib 3.

As I ever had a desire to have an insight in all Arts and Sciences, so more especially in this, because nothing more be seems a Gentleman than the knowledge of Arms.

Thomas Fuller, D D. The History of the Worthies of England, Printed at London, 1662. fol.

Chap. 16. Arms may seem in some sort to be Jure Divino to the Jews, having a precept for the practice thereof, Numb. 2. 2. The use thereof is great both in Peace and War. I begin with War, because Arms had their first rise from Arms, and had a Military origination; without these an Army cannot be methodized, and is but an heap of men. Like an Army (saith the Scripture, Cant. 6. 4.) terrible with Banners. Without which an Army is not terrible, but ridiculous, routing it self with its own confusion. Now, as no Army without Banners, so no Banner without Arms therein. If the Trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the Battle? 1 Cor. 14. 8. Now as the Trumpet tells the time, so the Banner proclaims the place of meeting; and if it have not distinguishable Emblems therein, who shall know whither to repair to his Captain or Company?

Arms are also useful in Peace, to distinguish one man from another. They be termed Nemina visibilia, visible Names: For as a Name notifieth a Man to the Ear, so his Arms do signifie signifie him to the Eye; though dead many years since; so signal is the service of Arms on Tombs, to preserve the memory of the deceased.

Matth. Carter Esq. in the Analysis of Armory.

Former Ages esteemed the Laws of Heraldry with as great a Veneration as any in the Nation; as indeed it ought still to be, and more especially in these and all such times as ours, the Court of Heraldry being not only the Law-giver to Honor, but the best Record of Families and Inheritances, since Coat-Armor hath been hereditary, &c. For if a man being an Orphan, and by such times as ours have been, the Records of what Estate did rightly belong to him, and from his Ancestors, may be burnt, plundered, or otherwise imbevelled, and by such spirits as such times do plentifully afford, have been obtruded from his right, and hath nothing to plead for it: This Office being the just Record of his Pedegree, would produce an evidence sufficient, though for many Generations his Misfortunes have descended.

Sylvanus Morgan in his Sphere of Gentry, Lib. 2.

Coats of Arms are no other than Symbols of Nobleness, and distinctions of Honor in the Bearers thereof; carrying certain hidden Mysteries, denoting the inward qualities of the mind.

Idem, in his Epistle to the Reader, prefixed to his Book intituled Armilogia, sive Ars Chromaeutica, &c.

Printed at London, 1666. 4^o.

Skill in Armory, although it be a thing now almost proper to the Heralds of Arms, who were in old times called Feciales, or Caduceatores, because they were Messengers of War and Peace; yet the ground they have is from the Civil Law, to whom belongeth the Ranging every Man into his Room of Honour, according as his place requireth; only the Heralds do give Notes as it were of their Ranks and Degrees, noting by these Emblems, as it were, the Law Civil, in respect of Treaties between Prince and Prince; in Marshall Causes, concerning Captains and Soldiers, and concerning the bearing of Arms; as some being of Publick Dignity and Office, as of Bishops, Admirals; or of essential Dignities, as of Kings and Princes; so lastly, of Private men.
